

Collier's Respect. ENGINEER MELVILLE BEARS TESTIMONY TO THE HEROISM OF HIS DEAD COMMANDER. WASHINGTON, November 23. The reading and approval of the record of the late Jeanette's voyage of inquiry for about two hours this morning, after which Chief-Engineer Melville was called and questioned by the Board. In reply to a further question witness said: "At one of the reported difficulties between the late Melville and the late Captain, I was present. Mr. Danenhorst was present. Mr. Collins was treated just as any other officer, and with the same cordiality. At one time Mr. Collins took a notion not to respond to the usual good-morning salutation that Mr. Danenhorst made. When the Captain entered the ward-room mornings it was his custom to say: 'Good morning, gentlemen, and who had rid the town of its scourge.' Mr. Collins, however, used to turn his back when he saw the Captain coming, and look away as if he did not see him. Mr. Newcomb and Mr. Collins used to talk and walk together more than they did with any of the other officers, and were on more intimate terms with each other than with the others. I was present at whatever was done in the mess on account of their being civilian officers, but all were treated with the same courtesy and upon an equal footing."

Q. Are there no others among the officers and men of the Jeanette crew that those men have mentioned who are deserving of commendation? A. Those I have named are especially deserving of mention. The general opinion aboard the ship was that Mr. C. Chipman was the best seaman of the crew. He was a thorough officer in all respects. Seaman Manson and Leach were especially faithful while in the whale-boat. The latter had his feet nearly frozen by remaining at the tiller for twelve hours without relief. It was considered a great misfortune to lose the services of these two men, but it would be deemed proper for me to pass judgment upon my commanding officer, but to my mind he was no good seaman, and I do not wish to say anything in any place. He always seemed equal to any emergency, and all that he did was done with his whole soul. Had I supposed that I would be permitted to speak of my commanding officer or his conduct, I should not have mentioned his name, but to pass without bearing my testimony to his worth and unflinching devotion to duty. But words of mine are of little value beside the monument which his record has erected to his heroic and self-sacrificing fidelity to the service and to the well-being of those entrusted to his charge.

A sensation in Milwaukee. THE STORY OF A PROMINENT CHICAGO WHO MARRIED A BURGLAR'S WIFE. A special dispatch to the New York World from Milwaukee, Wis., says: "A great sensation was created here to-day in Chicago to-day by the arrest of D. H. Hale, formerly manager of the Chicago clearing-house, and his wife on a charge of robbing several jewelry establishments in this city. Hale lost his position because of a scandal growing out of his visit to Chicago, some years ago his house in Chicago was robbed. The burglar was arrested, and is still in prison at Joliet. During the trial Hale fell in love with the burglar's wife, and she said to have taken her to his home and installed her as governess. His wife soon died. He married the burglar's wife, the latter having secured a divorce from her husband. It happened that not only was the woman's former husband, but also her second matrimonial name, the identical name of the sister and sister's husband are also in similar institutions. After marrying Hale she was charged with robbing a jewelry-store, but the affair was compromised. Her arrest at that time was considered a great sensation in Chicago. Since that time Hale has been out of employment. He came here with his wife a few days ago to endeavor to secure the position of assistant cashier of Merchants Exchange Bank. While here he was visited by several jewelry-stores and examined diamonds and other valuables. She ordered expensive jewelry sent to various parts of the city, giving her name as Mrs. Derby, and saying she would pay when the goods were delivered. The woman had her goods could not find her. This led to suspicion. The jewelers whose stores she had visited in examining their stock closely found valuable jewelry missing. Detectives searched for the woman and caught her just as she was leaving a jewelry store. Her husband was arrested soon afterwards. The woman made a full confession to your correspondent, stating that she had thrown the jewelry in the railroad station stove, and the damaged remains of the stolen property were found in the stove. She asserts that her husband had no hand in or knowledge of the matter."

Selfish of a man. A SEARCHER FOR PERPETUAL MOTION BLOWS HIS HEAD TO PIECES. A Whitesboro (Pa.) special of the 23rd inst. David E. Allen, a resident of Whitesboro, in Plymouth township, committed suicide to-day. He placed the revolver in his mouth and fired three shots. The first tore away his lip; the second came out of his forehead, above the eye, and the third went through the temple, coming out at the top and scattering his brains on the floor beside him. It appears from the evidence that Evans had been working for a long time upon a perpetual-motion machine, for the last two years doing several times the work of a man, and finally he became insane in accordance with these circumstances. He left the following letter for Mrs. Davis, to whom he bequeathed all his possessions: "I do sincerely prohibit any and all of the reverend clergymen to say a word for my old body. Bury me in my old rags, just as I am now. Sell that coat of mine or give it to whomsoever you please. I die in my atheistical faith, as freely as I have lived. He is in his faith that he will be resurrected, and his existence nor sensitiveness after death. It is the end, the final end of man as well as the common animals. You will judge this sane, blame it, nevertheless, it is truthful. I considered it concluded that to commit suicide would be the best thing that I could possibly do. I am but eluding miseries and pains. It is clear and evident that I am in the utmost poverty and distress, having a heart that is breaking out at me any more. I believe it prudent to leave this tyrannical and oppressive world and to be a pauper no more. I love no person anything, therefore what things are here shall be yours, Mrs. Davis. It would please me if they were of much greater value. Fanevell."

The end of a duellist. HOW A FRENCH BULLY AND COWARD MET HIS DEATH. [From a contemporary review.] The Comte de Larivière, one of the well-known among the aristocracy of the day in the street a business-man named Castella walking with his young and pretty wife, she advanced to him and said, with a polite bow, "I beg your pardon, but I have made a bet with my friend here, whom I beg to introduce to you, that I would kiss your wife while she was walking with you. Here the other man turned back, after having given you a slap in the face." Castella caught the next day with pistols. The Comte's first shot hit Castella on the right ear, he second on the left. Being wounded, he turned to the left, and fired a shot, which hit the third man, whom he called "le monsieur," and with the third he fired a shot through the eye. Castella was wounded in a manner dramatic enough. One night, as Larivière sat in his favorite seat in a cafe, while a masked ball was going on above, a stranger in a domino and mask came up to him and ordered his glass of punch and ordered a glass of punch instead, Larivière, for the first time in his life, turned pale and cried: "You accused, you don't know who I am." "O yes," the stranger replied, "I know who you are quite well," and with the words forced him into the chair from which he had risen. The orator was brought, and the stranger holding a pistol to Larivière's head, said: "Unless you drink this off I shall blow out your brains on the spot; if you do drink it off I will do you the honor of fighting you to-morrow." "With the sabre," cried Larivière, who had lately been practicing in a duel with a sabre. "How you like?" said the stranger. "Then, as I have humbled you enough to-night, I put off killing you till to-morrow." The morning came, the adversary met, and Larivière found that he had met his match. The stranger, who had not a moment's breathing space; but nevertheless closed his attacks until at last Larivière fell insensibly. "When are you going to kill me?" "Now," said the stranger, for the first time using his sabre like a duelling sword and plunging straight through Larivière's heart. Masses were said in the churches of Bordeaux for the man, who kept his name secret, and who had rid the town of its scourge.
